

Cry Me A River

Tears are shed relatively freely in our studio. Most of the times they are happy tears... but not always. Memories can dredge up emotions and can bring back the pain of loss or hurt. Our clients know they will always find a compassionate ear or empathetic shoulder on which to lean at such times. And we stock a large supply of tissue.

We've seen octogenarians shed tears watching footage of their now adult grandchildren as kids and being reminded of how quickly life has passed.

We've had people break down simply by hearing the long forgotten voice of a family member who had departed this earth decades earlier.

We've helped families plan memorial video presentations for their loved ones even as they grapple with the deepest emotional pain they've ever experienced.

We get it. We understand. And we are right there for you. Because as sometimes painful as they are, memories do matter. Because with the passage of time, our sadness will eventually fade. And when it does, it is the memories that we have worked to save or preserve that will bring us comfort, joy, and happiness. Sometimes, it feels like they are the only things that can.
