

This do ye, in remembrance of me.

Trying to remember key events or special moments is nothing new. Regardless of one's faith, we can all agree that the Bible, which in one form or another, has been around for millennia, always taught that we ought to remember what is important.

In the days of Moses, fathers were exhorted to teach their children the things of God, "speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." In other words, keep on teaching them... always. Why? So their children would learn and, most importantly, remember them.

Jesus took great pains to instruct his followers to use the practice we now know as communion in order to remember his sacrifice and what was accomplished through it. It is a practice that has continued uninterrupted in Christian religions for the last 2,000 years.

Why is it that cultures will build monuments or statues of influential leaders? It is done so future generations might recognize and respect the life and accomplishments of the one being honored. It is done so that others will remember.

Your memories are worthy of remembrance as well. Maybe you didn't change the world but I can guarantee that the impact of your life reaches well beyond you. And therefore, your memories matter... to someone. They deserve to live on after you are gone.
